any body, every body, men, people, they, we, a woman, women, etc. This on or l'on which is considered an indeterminate pronoun, is always singular in French, and only used in the nominative. It is often repeated in complex phrases, but care must be taken that the repetition does not refer to different persons from the first on. This is particularly employed to avoid the passive form. V. Réfléchi. As on or l'on (the l being added for the sake of euphony) is indeterminate, it must be rendered indeterminately in English. Ex. On dit, people say, they say, it is said. On lui parle, somebody speaks to him (or to her,) he (or she) is spoken to. Qu'en dira-t-on? what will the world say about it? Se moquer du qu'en dira-t-on, être audessus du qu'en dira-t-on, not to care what the world will say. On dit et l'on assure que, people say and assure that. On ne me persuadera jamais le contraire, nobody will ever persuade me to the contrary. Quand on s'est écarté du sentier de la vertu, on doit tâcher d'y rentrer, when one has deviated from the path of virtue, he (or she) ought to endeavour to get into it again. On a souvent besoin d'un plus petit que soi, one has often need of his inferior's assistance. On peut être belle, et par son affectation, se faire mépriser, a woman may be handsome, and yet make herself despised through her affectation.

POUR, pôor, prep. for, because of, upon the account of, for the sake of, considering, in favour of, in behalf of, on the side of. Pour cela, nevertheless, for all that. Pour cette raison, for that reason, therefore. Pour cet effet, therefore, and therefore. Pour le moins, at least. Pour lors, then, at that time. Pour l'heure, (le présent) for the present, as for now. Chambre pour chambre, j'aime mieux celle-ci que l'autre, since I must have one of these two rooms, I like this better than the other. Mourir pour mourir il vaut mieux mourir en combattant qu'en fuyant, when a man must die, it is better for him to die fighting than running away. [P] Pour will, in general, be properly used with respect to verbs ;—1st. when asking the question why or what for ? after what precedes, the infinitive will come in answer, though the English corresponding expression for chiefly requires the participle present. He will do any thing to oblige you, (he will do any thing, why ? or what for ?—to oblige you,) il fera tout pour

vous obliger. Men are born to work as birds to fly, les hommes sont nés pour travailler, comme les oiseaux pour voler.—2dly. When what precedes the infinitive implies sufficiency or excess. He has not health enough to undertake that, il n'a pas assez de santé pour entreprendre cela. He has too much good sense to do a thing which would prejudice his family, il a trop de bon sens pour faire une chose qui feroit tort à sa famille. He is very weak to ride on horseback, il est bien faible pour monter à cheval.—3dly. When the agent of the second verb is the very agent of the first, the infinitive may be used with the second; but if the agent of the second be different, the infinitive should not come in, unless we speak undeterminately. Now when the use of the infinitive is to be avoided, because that which is the agent is to be expressed, pour que may be introduced with the subjunctive. I was too unlucky for such a thing to happen to me, j'étois trop malheureux pour qu'une telle chose m'arrivât.—4thly. Sometimes we find one infinitive with pour or afin de, and then another verb in the subjunctive with que (instead of pour que or afin que) because the agent of the second verb is the very agent of the first, but the agent of the third is a different person or thing. Ce que j'en fais c'est pour (afin de) vous convaincre, et que vous n'en doutiez plus, the reason why I do this is that I may convince you, and that you should doubt it no longer.—5thly. Pour ne pas or afin de ne pas, may denote fear. Il a pris des mesures pour ne pas échouer dans son entreprise, he has taken measures for not miscarrying (for fear of miscarrying, that he might not miscarry, lest he should miscarry) in his enterprise.—6thly. Pour, with the infinitive, may be used in other circumstances which the following examples will elucidate: Les Scythes, pour être (encore qu'ils soient, parce qu'ils sont) Scythes, cessent-ils d'être des hommes, et pour avoir été (parce qu'ils ont été) nos ennemis, sont-ils indignes de compassion? are not the Scythians men, although Scythians; and because they have been our enemies, are they unworthy of our compassion? Corée n'attendait pas qu'elle acherât pour avouer (avant qu'il avouât, mais il avoua aussitôt) qu'il avait tort, Corée did not wait till she had done before he confessed (but readily confessed) that he was in the wrong. Souvent pour vouloir (en voulant, parce qu'on veut) être poli, on donne dans l'affectation, oftentimes in wishing (because one wishes, while one wishes) to be polite, one sinks into affectation. Il faut que vous m'aimiez bien peu, pour vous défier (vous qui vous défiez) ainsi de moi! you must love me very little, who can thus distrust me!—7thly. Pour, before an adjective or adverb with que and the subjunctive is equivalent to quelque que or tout que. Pour protégé qu'il soit, (quelque protégé qu'il soit, tout protégé qu'il est,) however protected he may be, let him be ever so well protected, protected as he is. Pour aimable qu'il puisse être, however amiable he may be, how amiable soever he may be, let him be ever so amiable, amiable as he may be. (See the observation on Avoir vous at Beau.) Hence it is that pour peu que with the subjunctive may be Englished by if ever so little. Pour peu que je m'entendisse sur cette matière, je pourrais faire voir, etc., if I enlarged (were I to enlarge) ever so little on that subject, I could show, etc.

RÉCIPROCITÉ, rā-sī-prō-sī-tā, s. f. reciprocity.

RÉCIPROQUE, rā-sī-prōk, adj. reciprocal, mutual, interchangeable. [F] A verb is called Reciprocal when the pronouns Se, Nous, Vous, mean one another or each other. But reciprocity is expressed in some verbs by S'entre, nous entre, vous entre, instead of the simple se, nous, vous, which might appear ambiguous without the word mutuellement or réci-proquement, which are equivalent to entre, which becomes entr' when the verb begins with a vowel. We may say in French, s'entr'aimer, to love one another, nous nous entr'aimons, we love one another. Vous vous entr'aimez, you love one another. Ils s'entr'aiment, or elles s'entr'aiment, they love one another. And so of the other tenses, s'entre-blesser, nous nous entre-blessions, vous vous entre-blessez, ils s'entre-blessent. If we say simply s'aimer, it would not only signify to love one another, but also to love one's self; then nous nous aimons would signify both we love one another, and we love ourselves. This remark will apply to all infinitives with s'entre or s'entr', since to the meaning of the infinitive, which may be found at its proper place in the alphabet, it is only necessary to add one another, each other, and sometimes to one another, to each other, as in s'entre-parler, to talk to each other or together.

RÉFLÉCHI, e, râ-flâ-shî, shî, adj. reflecting, reflective. Reflective verbs commonly drop the pronoun which marks reflection after faire, voir, laisser, ouïr or entendre, which gives them the appearance of neuter verbs. V. Cabrer. There are few active verbs which may not be made reflective; and they especially become so when the neuter verb is wanting in French, and a neuter sense is to be expressed. This is also the case when the object is to avoid the passive form without employing on or l'on, which are used for the same purpose. But the French naturally seek to give their expressions the same activity which characterises themselves, and hence many phrases passive in English have the reflective form in French, which in fact is a verb active, for the agent is found not only in the nominative but in the accusative also. Retirer, v. a. signifies to draw back, v. a. or to withdraw, v. a. but Retirer cannot be neuter. The French, to express to retire or withdraw, v. n. use se retirer, the true meaning of which is to draw one's self back or to withdraw one's self. In English, the agent is sometimes understood and the verb passive, when in French the indeterminate on or l'on is introduced, rendering what was the nominative in English the accusative in French, as well as in cases, where, rendering the verb reflective, it gives it for nominative what was the nominative in English, and for the accusative a pronoun which relates to the same nominative. On dira cela demain or cela se dira demain is equivalent to that will be told or mentioned tomorrow, or people will tell or mention that tomorrow; and ces bas se font à Boston or on fait ces bas à Boston is the same as these stockings are made at Boston. Observe, moreover, that often, in French, when the agent may be understood, it is used for the nominative of a reflective verb, placing what would naturally be the nominative of the reflective verb where the accusative would be placed; and this kind of construction is a new proof that the genius of the French tongue employs circumlocutions where the verb appears active. A Frenchman, to say in his language, a considerable fleet is fitting out at Boston, would naturally say, il s'équipe à Boston une flotte considérable; to render into his language, men are found or there are men found of that very disposition, he would say, il se trouve des hommes de ce même caractère, or on trouve des hommes de ce même caractère. And, things which never happen to others are daily happening to me, would be, il m'arrive tous les jours des choses qui n'arrivent jamais aux autres. V. the remark on A and De. The remark just made will be so much the more useful as more than half the reflective verbs are omitted in dictionaries, and the grammars do not explain the different ways in which the genius of the French language endeavours to avoid the ambiguities which would result from the too frequent repetition of on or l'on, whether to avoid confounding ce qui se fait with ce qui est fait, or to avoid a departure from the true character of the French people, which, as we have said, is activity.
